

Wood-Will-20050314073006

To: Julie L. Sigall
Associate Register for Policy & International Affairs

Date: 03/14/2005

From: Will Wood

Comment:

The right of copyright is to protect the original author or organization from unauthorized reproduction of a body of work. If the owner of that work cannot be ascertained or found, then the work should be considered public domain. The government should also not abuse the public domain issue into harboring items that may represent security or national interest items. All copyrights should also expire after the original author or creator dies or 20 years in the case of a corporate copyright.

Thanks.